With Les Dernières, Djamel B set out to bring together everything he loves in a single project and create the kind of music he himself would want to hear.

At the heart of the album lies a dialogue between the legacy of Django Reinhardt, the elegance of the French swing tradition represented by Jean Sablon, Henri Salvador and Sacha Distel, and the influence of artists such as Miles Davis, John Coltrane and Charlie Parker.

The quintet was conceived as a meeting point between these musical worlds. Built around a traditional Gypsy jazz rhythm section of two guitars and double bass, the ensemble is enriched by piano, alto saxophone and vocals. This instrumentation expands the group's sonic palette, creating a space where tradition meets a contemporary approach to composition and arrangement.

In shaping this repertoire, Djamel B sought to combine several approaches: writing original songs, revisiting classics of the French jazz repertoire, and creating original French lyrics for selected standards from the Great American Songbook. Every arrangement was conceived with respect for the spirit of the original works while offering a personal interpretation.

Les Dernières brings together nine tracks: three original compositions, three classics from the French repertoire, and three American standards, two of which have been adapted into French.

More than a tribute, the album is an attempt to carry a tradition forward by giving it a contemporary voice.
